FIGHT; ONE DYING

Dispute Over Burial Leads to a Shooting Affray-Crowd

After an argument between John Ro-manelli and Gaetano Mangino, two undertakers of Brooklyn's Italian section, over the burial of the body of an eight-year-old boy who was drowned in Gowanus Canal, Vincent Giannelli employee of Mangino's, the police say, fired one barrel of a sawed off shotgun at Bomanelli about 8 o'clock last night. dertakers of Brooklyn's Italian section, over the burial of the body of an eight-year-old boy who was drowned in Gowanus Canal. Vincent Giannelli employee of Mangino's, the police say, fired one barrel of a sawed off shotgun at Romanelli about 8 o'clock last night. Romanelli was sitting outside his shop at the corner of President street and Third avenue at the time.

In a moment Romanelli was pursuing Giannelli up the street with a revolver.

an hour later the police found Mangino lying in the gutter near Fourth avenue with two stab wounds in his leg and abdomen. He is not expected to live.

The report of the shotgun was the signal for a wild uproar among the people with whom the street was crowded. This was intensified by the trying out of the new block system of reserves. Those in the narrow district found every exit blocked by a patrolman. Every one who could be perfound every exit blocked by a pactor man.
